Quibblets on Strike!

Demand Chocolate and Desk Space for Rubber Ducks

Mundugus Fletcher offers special deal on chocolate supplies.

Lithographers, typesetters, reporters, graphic illustrators, mail room workers, apparition agents, floo network managers, owls, Muggle Liaison agents, translators, advertising subscription clerks, photographers, intergermet-thingy workers, cafeteria workers, Ministry of Magic infiltration agents ...

all WALK OFF THE JOB!

"No more cheap American chocolates in the workroom. We demand genuine Honeydukes"

Quibbler workers, often referred to as "Quibblets," seized the presses and ran off this special edition on Wednesday evening, just prior to walking off the job. Among their demands are the following:

- Doubling of salary. "That old Scrooge Xeno doesn't pay us anything anyway. It's the principle of the thing," said Dreamteam.
- Large tubs and basins near each desk for their rubber ducks. "Bob is an important contributor," declared SnapesSister. "I am tired of leaving him home alone."
- Teckmology improvements. Ruidius Hagrid and wordsaremagic demand more leckeltricity for the intergermet thingy.
- "Fatter rats," demand all the Quibbler delivery owls.
- Better Chocolate!--all parties are in agreement on this.

"Flood Xeno with your letters of protest!" says Evreka, Pulitzer Prize admiring reporter for The Quibbler. "Send them to quibbler@leakylounge.com."

Only the goats refuse to honour our picket line!

"Bah!" remarked Miriam, recent runner up for Page 3 Girl. "We all have our modeling careers to think of," she explained, as she munched on a picketer's protest sign.

*"We're not cleaning up after the goats on these photo shoot assignments anymore!"

Sally, born less than 3 weeks ago, entered the world weighing 23 pounds, three times the normal weight of the average lamb.

Striking Quibblets, in presenting this image of Sally the lamb, want gently to remind the aspiring young nanny goats who have refused to support their labour action that goats may not be the only game in town.
